1806 AD
MARSALA

The British arrive and begin the production of Sherry at Marsala

1805 AD
PALERMO

The Royal Court moves to Palermo. King Ferdinand I, with his wife Maria Carolina, sister of Marie Antoinette, French chefs called "Nozuzi" are brought over to prepare sophisticated cutting edge French cuisine in the palaces of nobles and aristocrats using quail rabbit, sole, capons, butter, cream and brandy. With great imagination and skill the servants of the nobility reinvent these dishes at home for their own families with lower quality ingredients. The "cucina povera" is formed with classic examples being breadcrumbs in place of parmesan and eggplant in place of chicken in the classic dish Caponata

SICILY

Sicily is the largest island in the Mediterranean and the largest region of the modern state of Italy. 5.3 million people live on Sicily, an island so small it fits into Tasmania 2.7 times. The Sicilian flag features the symbol of Sicily called "Trinacria", meaning triangle, which dates back to when Sicily was part of Magna Graecia. It symbolises the triangular shape of the island, and the three capes of Sicily pointing in their respective directions. The winged head of Medusa implies the protection of the Goddess Athena of ancient Grecian mythology, the patron Goddess of the isle. The wheat symbolises the fertility of the island

201 BC
MESSINA

The Punic Wars give control of Sicily to the Roman Empire. The Romans use Sicily as their breadbasket. They cultivate wheat and grains for export to Rome, crops that prosper in the Sicilian climate. The island is known as the "Granary of Rome". Cherries, plums and citron are imported from Asia

735BC
NAXOS

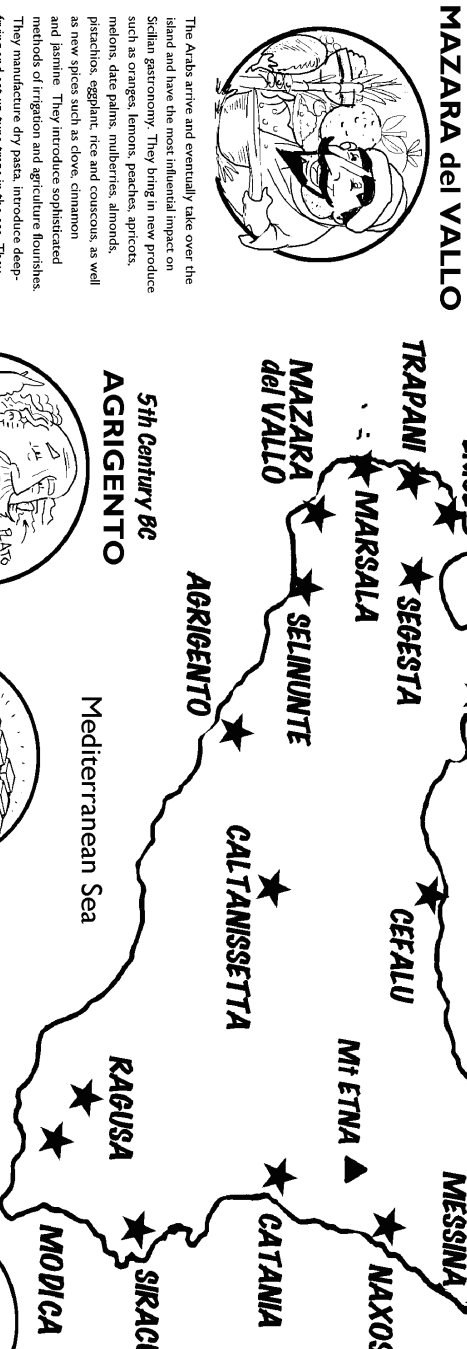

The Greeks arrive and first settle at Naxos, before going on to build cities across the island. They bring honey, wheat, walnuts, hazelnuts, figs, pomegranates, olives and olive oil, grapes and wine and sheep and goats to make cheese. They find and abundance of produce growing in the hills including wild fennel, capers, thyme and wild thistle, deep in taste as a result of growing in the hot Sicilian sun and the rich lava red soil. They teach methods of farming to the first known settlers the Sicil, Sicani and Etrusci people. Cops flourish on the fertile land to create a great deal of profitable trading. The abundance of fish in the sea is caught by fishermen and grilled and tuna roe is dried. They raise and cure pork in Siracusa. Vendors sell ready to eat food straight out on the streets, the first of Sicilian street food

5th Century BC
SIRACUSA

The first cookbook of the western world. "The Art of Cooking" is written in Siracusa by Mithraeus

In 1860 Sicily is liberated from Spanish rule by Giuseppe Garibaldi and is unified with Italy. From 1951-75 one million Sicilians emigrate in search of a better life

The Arabs arrive and eventually take over the island and have the most influential impact on Sicilian gastronomy. They bring in new produce such as oranges, lemons, peaches, apricots, melons, date palms, mulberries, almonds, pistachio, eggplant, rice and couscous, as well as new spices such as clove, cinnamon and jasmine. They introduce sophisticated methods of irrigation and agriculture flourishes. They manufacture dry pasta, introduce deep-frying and set up tuna traps in the sea. They introduce sugar cane and give Sicily its sweet tooth, iconic Sicilian desserts date back to this period such as Cassata, Cannoli, Marzipan and Nocino. They use the Etna's snow and fruit syrup to make Granita to survive the heat. They bring in the Agrodolce (sweet and sour) method of cookery. The local cuisine acquires the sophisticated flavours that still make it unique 1000 years later

Plato visits Siracusa and expresses his strong disapproval at this so called "life of happiness, stuffed full as it was with the banquet of the Italian Greeks and Sicilians, who ate to repletion twice every day"

The Spanish Inquisition commences its terror on Sicily. Chocolate, squash, tomatoes, vanilla, peppers and potatoes are brought to Sicily from Mexico on Spanish ships. Ancient Aztec chocolate making techniques are still in use in Modica today
